

March 2019

View this email in your browser

What We Can Continue to Learn from Fred Rogers

A Tribute to Fred Rogers -- and You

March 20 would be Fred Rogers' 91st birthday, and I wanted to celebrate by sharing with you the tribute video that PBS produced shortly after his death in 2003.

As I listened to the words "Feels Like Home to Me," on the song they chose, I thought about how much we all have learned from Fred about the simple, everyday, ordinary things that make a place "feel like home" -- warm and welcoming, safe and secure.

Fred greeting us everyday on Mister Rogers' Neighborhood in a place that looked like a home. In fact, Fred referred to it as his “television house.” But it wasn’t just the rooms and the furniture that made it feel like home. It was a place where there was a predictable routine; where people cared about you “just because you’re you”; where it was okay to be sad or mad or scared; where people helped you deal with those feelings in a constructive way; and where people celebrated the little and big things that you do. And there was something in his eyes...and something in his voice.

When someone turned the spotlight on Fred, he always turned it around and made it shine on others. So as a nod to Fred, I am turning the spotlight back to shine on you. You, too, make a lasting impact on the children and their families because there are things about your care...your eyes and your voice...that make it “feel like home.” And there’s a lot of evidence that tells us that’s the best environment for children to grow and learn.

There’s something in your eyes...

- when your eyes have a warm welcoming look that lets each child know, “I’m glad you’re here”;
- when your eyes say to a grownup who has a child in your care, “I know you’re doing the best you can”;
- when your eyes tell a child, “I’m really interested in what you’re doing”;
- when your eyes convey empathy as you listen to a child’s (or parent’s) concerns;
- when your eyes light up to let a child know you noticed that moment of finding self-control or sharing or helping another child.

There’s something in your voice...

- when your voice sounds like it’s really fun to sing together (whether or not you can carry a tune);
- when your voice sounds firm, but kind, to help a child stay in control;
- when your voice joins in a delightful laugh with a child;
- when your voice lets children know you love reading to them as you open a book at circle time;

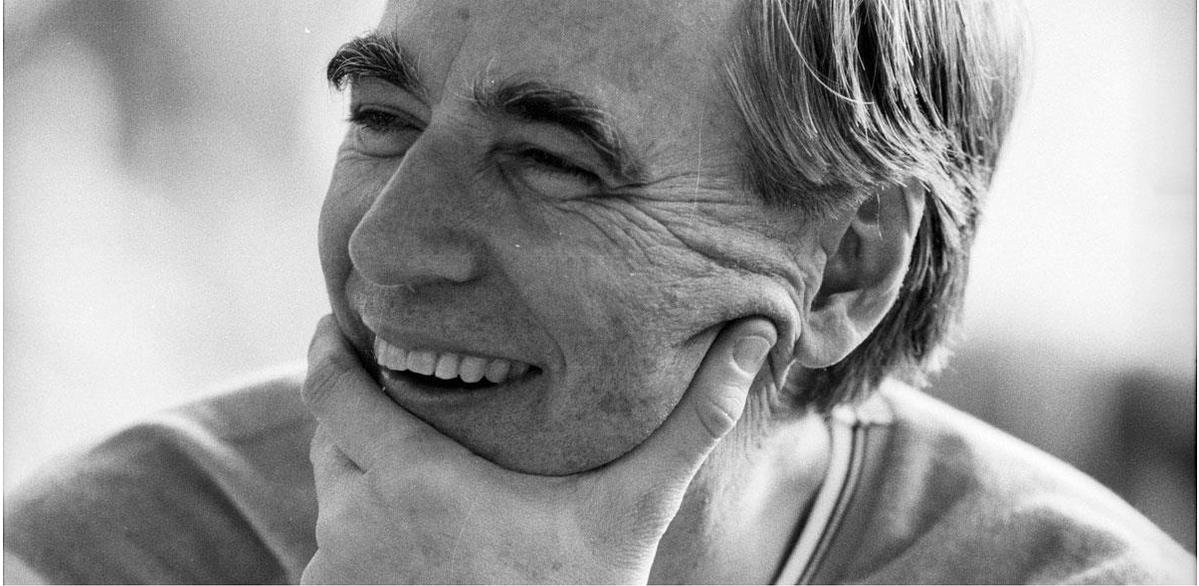

- when your voice is respectful and caring when a child or parent shares a concern;
- when your voice is silent and you don't say anything at all until you've really listened to children or their family tell you about something, whether it's a big thing or a little thing.

Thanks for all you do for and behalf of children...and thanks for being our neighbor.

Hedda Sharapan
M.S. Child Development
PNC Grow Up Great Senior Fellow
hedda.sharapan@stvincent.edu

Timeless Wisdom from Fred Rogers

"I believe that by the time a child grows up, that child's first teacher and second teacher and all the child's important adults will have become incorporated into that child's development. That's the way it is with all children, and although they might not remember clearly, those of us who were the educators of their early lives will always be a part of who they are, just as those who meant so much to us when we were children will always be part of who we are."

MORE QUOTES

Subscribe | Forward | View past issues
Update your profile | Unsubscribe

© 2019 Fred Rogers Center for Early Learning &
Children's Media

You are receiving this email because you opted into our newsletter.

Photos courtesy of the Lynn Johnson Collection:
Ohio University Libraries.

Fred Rogers Center for Early Learning & Children's Media

Saint Vincent College
300 Fraser Purchase Road
Latrobe, Pennsylvania 15650-2690